Lassaw Sports Bar is named after Nick Lassa, who played in the NFL in the early 1920s, and is a legend of the Salish Kootenai tribe.

"One of the earliest and most colorful football characters, though largely forgotten, marked the association between and the NFL and the Confederated Salish & Kootenai Tribes (CSKT). Tribal member Nick Lassa played guard in the NFL in 1922 and 1923 with the Oorang Indians, an all-Native American team based in La Rue, Ohio. Nick was called by his teammates "Long Time Sleep" due to his teammates' difficulty getting him up in the morning."
